Q: For years I was told that reproducing or copying an DoD military identification card was not allowed. Yet to pick up a prescription at the Buckley pharmacy for a spouse or sponsor, you must have a copy of the member's military I.D. card.

If copying a DoD military I.D. card is not allowed, why is the pharmacy telling authorized patrons to make copies to pick up prescriptions?

A: In 1998, the Office of Surgeon General addressed the issue of releasing prescriptions to patient representatives. In a policy letter dated May 22, 1998, Maj. Gen. Earl Mabry, commander of the Air Force Medical Operations Agency stated that a photocopy of the beneficiary's I.D. card was authorized and sufficient as proof of the eligibility to release prescriptions to an authorized patient representa-

Q: I'm writing in regards to the service at the base exchange. I am a frequent shopper at the BX and really enjoy being able to shop there. My problem is the long wait in the customer service line. Most mornings there is only one person there to serve several patrons. That person is very friendly, courteous and professional but she can only serve one person at a time and needs help.

A: Thank you for your question concerning the customer service counter at the base exchange. Normal manning for the department is two people. When there are few or no customers, one of the associates may be pulled to work other tasks, such as restocking returns. When it gets busy again, they will be called back.

However, since this appears not to have been the case during your visit, we will be monitoring this area more closely to prevent this from happening again. We apologize for any inconvenience this may have caused.

Significance of the 460th Air Base Wing emblem

Blue and gold are the Air Force colors. Blue alludes to the sky, the primary theater of Air Force operations. Gold refers to the sun and the excellence required of Air Force personnel. The winged eye derives from the 460 Tactical Reconnaissance Wing, one of the former designators of 460 ABW. The two orbiting Pole Stars depict the active duty and reserve components supported by the wing. The globe symbolizes the global nature of the Wing's mission.

Coxer Story

A veteran's affair: Buckley salutes local heros

By 2nd Lt. Carla Gleason 460th Public Affairs

What does Veteran's Day mean to you? An extra day off? A few more precious hours of sleep? Or is it symbolic of much more?

This Veterans Day, many members of the 460th Air Base Wing and Team Buckley spent their holiday showing some good old fashioned patriotism while honoring some of our nation's heroes.

Buckley's salute to veterans began with a luncheon salute on Nov 6.

"We assemble this morning to salute you...our veterans," said Col. Allen Kirkman, Jr., commander of the 460th Air Base Wing in his opening remarks to the some 500 veterans who attended the luncheon held in hangar 909. "You have each given us the gift of freedom and we salute you."

The luncheon was organized by the city of Aurora and included several speakers, a live radio broadcast from 1430 AM KEZW and lunch catered by Carraba's Italian Grill.

Although the luncheon was a resounding success, the observance didn't stop there. More than 75 Buckley volunteers showed up bright and early Saturday morning to march in the downtown Denver Veteran's parade.

The official story of the origins of Veterans Day is well known. According to the National Veterans Foundation, at the 11th hour, on the 11th day of the 11th month in 1918, the guns of World War I fell silent and "Armistice Day" was born. Eight years later a Presidential Proclamation invited people to observe the day with appropriate ceremonies. With the passage of time it was changed to "Veterans Day". This year Buckley's Sergeants' Association, including more than 20 volunteers and the 460 ABW commander, chose to celebrate the observance in a personal way, by visiting veterans in the local VA hospital and nursing home.

"Many of our veterans are many miles away from their home and loved ones and visits are always greatly appreciated," said Randy Emeterio, head of volunteer service and public affairs at the local VA hospital. "These veterans made it safe for us to live free in our nation today; we celebrate Veterans Day every day here year round."

The visit wasn't just an opportunity for Buckley members to express their often long overdue thanks; it also gave the veteran residents a chance to relive their war stories. And everyone came away a little more educated.

"I was a medic in the army for 20 years starting in 1940," said VA hospital patient Bernice Harvies. "After I got my education, they sent me to work training new medics to ship out." And who were those medics according to Harvies? Army cooks who couldn't get along with their sergeants.

"Our retraining methods are a little different today," said 460th ABW Command Chief Master Sgt. Rene Simard, chuckling at the vision of Army cooks turned medics.

After the morning visit,
Kirkman treated everyone to lunch and then it was off to yet another observance ceremony, this one a little more somber. Fairmont Cemetery hosts a veteran's remembrance ceremony annually, giving them the opportunity to both honor veterans and educate the younger generation about the sacrifice military members give for our country.

"On this day we pause to reflect on those who gave given so much to our nation. On this day we pause to thank you for your sacrifice," said Kirkman as he addressed the crowd of veterans and civilians alike. The observance was marked by a medal presentation honoring our "forgotten heroes," keynote speaker Congressman Bob Beauprez and a flag retirement ceremony by two local Boy Scout troops. Buckley's Honor Guard gave a resounding 21 gun salute and the crowd dispersed to the sound of Taps played by the John Philip Sousa Band of Colorado.

"If history has taught us anything, it is that Americans will bear any hardship, overcome any obstacle and conquer any for their pursuit of liberty and justice," said Kirkman. "To all who have worn our nation's uniform, America is better for your service."

A new online financial tool is available to Team Buckley members now. The 460th Comptroller Flight signed Buckley up as a test base for a continuously updated financial record that can be accessed through Leaveweb.

How does the new Leaveweb options differ from myPay?

According to 2nd Lt. Damon Roberts, chief of financial services here, the difference lies in the realtime updates.

"Leaveweb shows more information to the individual. They can look to see if any changes have taken affect almost instantly," said Roberts.

There are still advantages of myPay over Leaveweb, according to Roberts. In myPay, the member is allowed to make changes to their information, such as changes to tax witholdings, address, starting or stopping an allotment and printing their leave and earning statements.

Leaveweb, is for informational purposes, but the information shown is the most current available.

There are new enhancements to Leaveweb as the test phase continues, said Roberts, so members should access it on a regular hagig

Twelfth chief of Air Force visits Buckley

By Staff Sgt. Christine Castillo 460th Public Affairs

Most airmen who've read Air Force Pamphlet 36-2241, better known as the Promotion Fitness Examination (PFE) study guide, know the name Chief Master Sgt. Eric Benken. Benken was the 12th chief master sergeant of the Air Force, so he is mentioned in the history chapter of the PFE. But Team Buckley members were given an opportunity Nov. 6 to meet the retired chief, ask questions and get feedback from the man himself.

Benken's busy schedule at Buckley consisted of attending the Veteran's Day Salute, hosting an enlisted call and speaking at a Buckley Airman Leadership School graduation.

Although this wasn't Benken's first sight of Buckley, it was his first real visit. His first impressions of the base were positive ones.

"I'm very impressed with the growing base, missions and the diversity in the kinds of missions that Buckley has to offer," said Benken. He also mentioned that the people and the leadership here really stood out.

Since his retirement, Benken thinks of his role as a 'cheerleader' for the armed forces. His main points in his visits to bases include core values and the importance of military service.

During the enlisted call, the chief recalled personal experiences over his 30-year career contrasting anti-war protests of the Vietnam era to the present value that many Americans place on the armed forces. He also illustrated how far technology has advanced by explaining how jobs that used to take hours on manual typewriters now take seconds on computers and how science fiction has become a reality in cellular phones, wireless networking and the Air Force's Airborne Laser.

"The one thing that hasn't changed is that the Air Force is still about teamwork and service," said Benken.

At the end of the meeting, the chief took questions from the audience:

What can you tell us about the future of the Air Force?

"I still don't think we have caught up with the fact that we were a cold war force in the 1980s," said Benken. "In 1989 (when the Soviet Union fell), suddenly there was much less need for many of our overseas bases. That is what started our transition to the expeditionary concept. Today, I think Secretary Rumsfeld has a much better idea of what type of force we need to be. In the future, I think the Air Force will be much more 'blended' with active-duty, Guard and reserve people working more closely. And I'm sure that the Air Force will continue to evolve."

What are the secrets of your success?

"First, pay attention to the basics: dress and appearance, timeliness and doing the job right the first time," said Benken. "The second part of setting yourself up for success in the Air force is education. Get all that you can. Aside from helping during your Air Force career, I can tell you from personal experience that, when you transition to a civilian job, employers look for educated people. In fact, the minimum requirement for most of the best management positions is a bachelors degree."

In addition to conducting two enlisted calls, the chief presided at an airman leadership school graduation and attended with local veterans during a Buckley's 9th annual Veteran's Salute.

"He is an excellent public speaker – very entertaining and charismatic," said Staff Sgt. Tiffany Dlugi, a graphic artist from the 460th Communications Squadron. "The thing that most impressed me about the chief is that he was here for the veteran's salute. I think it's great that our veterans were recognized and honored this way."

A base construction worker notified the law enforcement desk that a power tool had been taken from their construction area. There are currently no suspects. The incident is pending further investigation.

Emergency Response

Location: Bldg. 490

The fire department notified the law enforcement desk that an engine responded to Bldg. 490 for a female suffering from chest pains. Two patrols were dispatched. The fire department treated the individual on scene and an ambulance transported her to a local medical facility.

Hazardous Material Incident

Location: West Of Bldg. 471

A security forces member notified the law enforcement desk of a hazardous substance spill near Bldg. 471. Three patrols were dispatched to cordon off the area. The spill was cleaned up and the fire chief terminated the response.

Suspicious Vehicle

Location: East of Bldg. 1642

Security forces personnel notified the law enforcement desk that a suspicious vehicle was parked near Bldg. 1642. The members made contact with the vehicle's owner who stated he was waiting for his daughter. The law enforcement desk notified the Aurora Police Department who dispatched a unit. One patrol was dispatched to observe the vehicle from the inside of the installation. The Aurora Police Department officer did not see the vehicle.

Unlocked Facility

Location: Bldg. 1301, Naval Reserve Center

A security forces member notified the law enforcement desk that while conducting a check of Bldg. 1301, he found a door on the west side of the building unsecure with no signs of forced entry. One patrol was dispatched. Security forces established a cordon and completed a walk around of the facility. Security forces contacted the building custodian, who responded. Security forces and the building custodian conducted an interior check of the facility where everything appeared to be in order.

Attention Team Buckley Members

The installation will be hosting a Team Buckley Coloring Contest beginning Nov. 21. The contest is open to children ages 0-10. The winner chosen will be featured on the holiday cover, Dec. 19 of the base newspaper. Every branch of service is welcome to submit their child's artwork. So, look for the coloring sheet and entry form on Page 3 of next week's issue and enter!

I can do that!

Opportunities to excel await you at the military's newest Air Force base

By Lt. Col. Barbara Krause 460th Medical Operations Flight Commander

What's the reward for a job well done? Another job, of course! You may have noticed that there are often a couple of people in your unit who are consistently selected for most of the taskings. That could be due to one of three situations:

- ☐ They volunteered first
- ☐ No one else volunteered
- ☐ They were selected based on past successes.

If you were one of the many who were chosen by their commanders to work a project, congratulations. The non-volunteers may ask, "why me," with their wise commanders responding, "why not you?"

Most supervisors have "been there, done that" already. They didn't get where they are by shying away from additional duties. In fact, supervisors are obligated to cultivate future leaders by sowing their wealth of taskings and allowing the junior members to benefit from learning how to move a unit forward. "But I've never done that before," is another typical response. Great, here's your chance to grow.

First, take ownership of your project. Ask questions, do some research. My favorite strategy is to contact other bases for some ideas. Seek help. Usually there are a couple of people in your section who've worked similar issues and can offer suggestions or lend a hand. Fight for feedback from your supervisor to make sure you're on the right track. Fail to plan and you plan to fail. Outline the steps in your process. Try a dry run or a pilot study. Adjust your plan as necessary.

Next, implement your project and experience the enjoyment of seeing it through to its end. Evaluate the outcome. What went right? What would you do differently?

A few words of caution: don't over-commit yourself to multiple projects to the point that you can't follow them through to their completion. You will soon gain a reputation of someone who has their hands in everything yet gets nothing done. Such a person quickly loses credibility and as a result no longer will have the confidence of their teammates or supervisor. Avoid the over-promise and under-deliver trap.

So what is the reward for a job well-done? On a small scale, knowing you did your best at attempting something new and learning at the same time often fuels one to continue on the road toward excellence. Even tiny successes can prepare you to tackle more complex jobs next time. On a grander scale, an award or perhaps public accolades may come your way. Ultimately, raters will recognize your potential to handle more responsibility and could very well make promotion recommendations. Anyone who has taken a hike in the beautiful Colorado Rocky Mountains more likely than not has witnessed trees, plants and wildflowers seemingly growing out of rocks.

Somehow the seedlings had just enough water and dirt to grow out of those painful surroundings and bask in the Colorado sunshine.

You can, too. No one wants to see you stagnate or set you up for failure because in the end, when one member succeeds, the entire unit wins.

Like jolly green giants, supervisors are there to feed, water and nurture their little green sprouts to help them get beyond the pain of sitting in a bud and finally blossom into future leaders.

Buckley, as the Air Force's newest military installation, is growing by the minute and has countless opportunities to excel. New units are springing up and "old" ones are flowering in terms of adding on missions and welcoming newcomers.

Take root in Buckley's growing garden of success. Get involved, make a difference and bloom where you're planted!

Hometown: Lafayette, La.

Time-in-service: Eight years

Hobbies: Swimming, mountain hiking, and caring for "Hobbs" her Shibu Inu (small furry dog)

Staff Sgt. Rachel Estrada credits her mother, Kathleen, for her life successes.

"Mom had an awesome way of making me believe in myself. Any time I would feel discouraged, a quick talk with Mom would vividly remind me that she believed in me, so why shouldn't I do the same. Parents play such a vital role in how their kids see themselves in the world," said Estrada.

Unfortunately, she lost her mother last year. "I have three younger siblings and I find myself taking on the role left by the loss of our mother. I talk to them often and pass on the family support and advice that I received from Mom. I think they listen to me. They have always praised my decision to join the Air Force. Even though I am away from them, they recognize the positive impact my choice to join and stay in the Air Force has made in my life," said Estrada.

Estrada has made the most of her Air Force career and has definitely established an outstanding military record. She was the Air Force Space Command's Medical Laboratory Airman Technician of the Year for 2001.

"That award meant a lot to me. I already knew that I was working hard, but the award let me know that my leadership recognized the effort that I was putting forward.
Supervisors should never miss an opportunity to let those down the chain-of-command know that they are being watched and appreciated," said Estrada.

"I loved Japan. I find other cultures fascinating and appreciate the opportunity the Air Force afforded me to live in the Orient. As far as an education, I was in college when I enlisted and my recruiter helped me find a job as a medic. My training in the lab matches perfectly with my long term goals of focusing on a career in forensic psychology," said Estrada.

Civilian health care premiums rising, 'open season' begins

Courtesy of 460th Public Affairs Office

Air Force civilian health care plan premiums are expected to increase an average of more than 10 percent in January - that means employees with 'self-only' coverage will pay about $5 more per pay period and those with 'family coverage' will pay $11.95 more.

Employees will have the opportunity to review and update plans during the program's open season, Nov. 10 - Dec. 8.

The number of health plan carriers is also increasing by 17 for a total of 205 options available for employees to choose from in 2004, said Janet Thomas of the Benefits and Entitlements Service Team at the Air Force Personnel Center.

Included in the increase of carriers are two new "consumer-driven" plans that allow employees to manage their own health care needs and health dollars. Nine health plan carriers are dropping out of the Federal Employee's Health Benefits program this year.

There is a fairly easy way for employees to inquire about different health care providers, according to Darrel M. Hoffman, administrative assistant in Buckley's Civilian Personnel office.

"(Employees) can review what plan they have with other plans and compare costs and types of coverage," said Hoffman.

People need to look at what their income is compared to what the costs of the plans are for the new year and decide if a change is in order, according to Hoffman.

Office of personnel management officials released the FEHB guides comparing costs, benefits and quality indicators. Those guides are available online at www.opm.gov/insure/health/index. asp. Individual plan brochures will be available soon.

OPM will not be sending out civilian personnel health care booklets to bases in the coming year to try to keep costs lower for employees.

Fifty years: ARPC reflects on past, prepares for future

By Lt. Col. Gus Schalkham Air Reserve Personnel Center

While Buckley's Air Base Wing is just beginning a new heritage, one team member, the Air Reserve Personnel Center (ARPC) is celebrating a milestone this month. ARPC is celebrating it's 50th anniversary.

Fifty years ago Nov. 1, 1953 the Air Reserve Records Center, later renamed the Air Reserve Personnel Center, was established in Denver, Colo. to centralize and standardize reserve records custody. Wow! We have sure come a long way from what our mission was in 1950.

ARPC opened for business at 3800 York St. in 1954, and remained at that location until moving to Lowry Air Force Base, Colo. in Sept. 1976.

Today, our primary mission at ARPC is mobilization. Col. Jim Playford, ARPC Commander, shared some insight.

"At the height of the mobilization after Sept. 11, 2001, we processed more than 4,000 individual mobilization augmentees who came forward when our nation called. We are very proud of that fact. Additionally, we provide personnel and administrative support to more than 1.2 million Air Force Reserve and Air National Guard members to ensure they are ready, available resources for our total force team."

Playford added, "And while we're proud of our small role in preparing the nation's reserve forces, our citizen airmen have shown a remarkable willingness and readiness to serve in time of need. Current events have certainly made many people aware that reservists are on the front lines of the nation's war on terror. Whether active duty, Guard or Reserve, we are all members of one team with one goal: the defense and preservation of our great country."

What many people do not know is the extent the reserves have played in those national emergencies with regard to mobilization. They are not familiar with the rich history and role ARPC has accomplished over the past 50 years being an instrumental factor in our nation's ability to mobilize.

Most of the general public understands reservists have been called upon to support Operation Iraqi Freedom. But the first mobilization took place in 1961 to support the Berlin Crisis, and this was followed by another call during the Cuban Missile Crisis of 1962. Vietnam, Kosovo, Desert Storm/Desert Shield saw additional needs for mobilization and reservists came forward to answer the call.

Where does the next 50 years take us? We know since the events of 9/11 that the world we live in has changed. But what is necessary to succeed today is the same ingredient we needed for the past 50 years of our ARPC history - people. The world's leading-edge technology is useless without the well-trained, well-prepared men and women to field it.

"Whatever the transformation - change is something the men and women of Air Force Reserve team has being doing quite well for the past 50 years and I know they will continue to excel and lead us in the next Golden Jubilee celebration of the American spirit of freedom," said Playford.

Have you ever wanted to make your voice heard? Have you ever wanted to speak out on important issues here at Buckley or in your workcenter? Well with the 2003 Air Force Climate Survey you have the perfect opportunity to do just that. This survey, formally known as the Air Force Chief of Staff Survey after it was initiated by Gen. John P. Jumper, asks all Air Force personnel for their input and feedback on how they feel their unit or workcenter is doing - particularly in regards to the work environment. It consists of a handful of questions ranging from coworker interaction to your supervisor's leadership abilities and many other vital topics.

This is an invaluable tool for commanders, as each one will receive a report detailing all the responses, comments and survey data for their unit. All commanders will then brief the results of the survey back to their unit sometime early in 2004. Best of all, the 2003 Air Force Climate Survey is completely anonymous. The system developed by the Air Force Manpower and Innovation Agency works hard to maintain your anonymity. The demographic data that the survey asks for will not be passed onto your commander; only the survey results themselves will be forwarded.

This freedom allows for us to speak without reservation or fear of reprisal to communicate important issues to our leaders. You can rest assured that your identity will be protected – so be honest and forthright in the survey.

Almost everyone is eligible to take the survey: All active duty Air Force, civilian government employees and Air Force Guard and Reserve personnel can log on and take the survey. The web-based system ensures that you will be able to complete the survey in an expedient manner – it is > quick and painless. It has taken approximately 30 minutes for most who have taken it, although the amount of extra comments you chose to include in the survey will ultimately affect how long it takes. One other note is that the survey will not accept a survey that it can tell has been quickly whipped through. That is, if you simply click through each screen as fast as possible without reading the questions, the survey will not count. So take some time and do this right – give valuable and accurate input that the Air Force leadership can use to make future decisions.

To take the survey simply logon anywhere you have access to the Internet (at your home or office) to https://afclimatesurvey.af.mil/ and click on "Take the Survey". After a couple introductory screens you are on to the survey. Our goal is to have the highest participation rates as possible for the survey to ensure that the data our leadership receives is an accurate reflection of all the troops. If you have not yet done so, you only have a short while left to take the survey: it runs through Nov.r 23. The 460th Air Base Wing commander, Col. Allen Kirkman Jr. encourages all personnel at Buckley to please take the survey today!

For more information or questions regarding the survey, contact 1st Lt. B. Jay Strawser at 303-677-6941.

Great sense of pride...

Barracks Marines remember birth, sacrfices for country

By Cpl. Nathan A. Tiller American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- On Nov. 10, 1775, an act by the Continental Congress established the Continental Marines, giving rise to the United States Marine Corps. Two hundred and twenty eight years later, the Corps is stronger than ever; Marines never forgetting to remember those who have gone before and thanking them for what they've done.

For leathernecks stationed at Marine Barracks, "8th and I", Washington, D.C., this sense of belonging is even greater. It is here where the Corps began to prove itself, with Marines fighting the British during the Revolutionary War and later standing the test yet again during the War of 1812 at the Battle of Bladensburg, just a few miles from our Nation's Capitol.

To commemorate our founding, Marines from the Barracks held a mid-day parade and wreath-laying ceremony Nov. 10 at the Marine Corps War Memorial in Arlington, Va.

After a performance by "The President's Own" United States Marine Corps Band, Barracks Marines marched out onto the parade deck to pay tribute to all those Marines past and present who were in attendance.

The guest of honor, 30th commandant, retired general Carl E. Mundy Jr. shared his thoughts on the current state of the Corps.

"Sometimes we spend so much time trying to carry a tune, we forget about the meaning of the words," he said, before reciting and reflecting upon the Marine Corps' Hymn. He then made note of America's pride and gratefulness for the services we as a Corps provide. The solemn former commandant said it's because of the contributions of Marines past and present that the Marine Corps is what it is today.

After speaking, he joined current Commandant, Gen. Michael W. Hagee and Barracks Commander, Col. Daniel P. O'Brien in the honor party, for their walk across the parade deck to lay a wreath at the foot of the memorial.

For "8th and I" devil dogs, having this responsibility to put on such a show adds to their deeprooted sense of duty and honor, making the Corps' birthday more than just another day. It's

Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's wrapped into one.

This ceremony-filled time of year for the Corps doesn't just have meaning for active duty or reserve Marines.
Veterans and those who value the sacrifices our men and women in uniform make also take great pride in celebrating the history of the Corps.

"Once a Marine, always a Marine. This is our day," said former gunnery sergeant Jerome S. Sonnier. "Camaraderie, old friends...friends who are no longer here."

The actions of those Marines before us fuel our quest, make our job easier and never fail to motivate us through any and every situation. For their sake, and ours, we must never forget.

DECA invites everyone to support military families, charities with the 'Gift of Groceries'

By Master Sgt. Deb Smith 460th Public Affairs

With the holiday season upon us, households everywhere are preparing for the annual invasion of family and friends. Turkey and all the trimmings, fabulous deserts, and of course, a parade of neverending snacks during the big game! A time to truly be thankful for the freedom we enjoy—and the service members that protect it.

And to thank our soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines, the Defense Commissary Agency (DeCA) encourages anyone—not just service members—to give the "gift of groceries" this holiday season.

The "Gift of Groceries" program replaces the local "plastic" commissary gift card program, which is slated to be phased out at a later date. While the cards have been available in commissaries since the fall of 2001, and have been well received by installation programs such as food banks or chaplains funds, a major drawback was the card's lack of portability—meaning the card had to be spent in the same store in which it was purchased.

However, the new "Gifts of Groceries" certificates will add not only portability among commissaries around the world, but the convenience of ordering them over the Internet. Also, anyone can purchase the new certificates, anytime of day, but they can only be redeemed by authorized commissary shoppers.

The certificates are made possible through an agreement with CertifiChecks Inc. at no cost to DeCA or the federal government.

Kaye Kennedy, chief, corporate communications, said in a recent DeCA press release that the new commissary gift certificates are an ideal way for friends, family and the public to show their support for military families by giving the certificates as gifts, or donating them directly to military charities that assist families in need.

"Last year we heard from a number of installation organizations with holiday assistance and food programs that the gift certificate program really worked for them," said Kennedy. "In addition, the public was generous in donating gift certificates to worldwide organizations that assist the military, such as the USO, Air Force Aid Society and Fisher House Foundation."

The certificates are not available for sale in commissaries, but can be purchased online with a credit card at www.commissaries.com or by calling toll free 1-877-770-GIFT. They can also be purchased with a mail-in or FAX form found at the gift certificate link at www.commissaries.com.

A standard charge of $4.95, paid by the purchaser, covers the costs

Commissary gift certificates can be purchased several ways:

Order by phone at 1-877-770-4438 (U.S. ONLY) or www.commissaries.com/certificheck/index.htm. Purchase online to give as a gift to an authorized shopper for a special occasion.

of handling, printing and mailing. Additional charges may apply for large orders or special delivery, but installation charities can apply for a waiver by checking with their local commissary.

"The commissary benefit offers an average savings of 30 percent or more, and that can really extend the purchasing power of a family using a commissary gift certificate," said Kennedy.

Benefits counselors are available weekdays, 7 a.m. - 6 p.m. central time.

During this open season, eligible employees may also enroll in the Flexible Spending Account program for calendar year 2004. There are two types of FSA accounts: the Health Care Flexible Spending Account (HCFSA) and the Dependent Care Flexible Spending Account (DCFSA). FSA enrollment is conducted directly with SHPS Inc., the third party program administrator, at www.fsafeds.com/fsafeds or 1-877-372-3337, or TDD: 1-800-952-0450.

Employees eligible for FEHB, even if not currently enrolled, are eligible to elect a Health Care FSA.

All employees with qualified dependents may enroll in the Dependent Care FSA except temporary employees with no fixed work schedule whose tour of duty is six months or less. Additional information regarding the FSA program is available on the BEST Homepage and the FSAFEDS Web site.

Hoffman recommends any employees with a military spouse not get their own health care policy because there's no need for two plans. Couples that have one military spouse can consolidate and use the military insurance to save money.

460th Comm Squadron repeats as flag football champs

On a cold day at Buckley Air Force Base, the 460th Communications Squadron steamrolled through the playoffs to capture the championship for the second year in a row. In order to make it happen they first beat the 743rd Military Intelligence Battalion 20-0 on Oct. 27. Then on Nov. 1, they beat the MACS-23 unit 38-23, and in the championship game they defeated Defense Finance Accounting Service Denver (DFAS) 16-8.

In capturing the championship for the second year in a row, the 460 CS accomplished a feat that has never been recorded at Buckley AFB in any sport, an undefeated season.

They went 11-0 in the regular season, and then steamed to three additional victories in the playoffs. This was the ultimate goal of our season, coach Alvin Lee said, "To go out on the field with the level of competition we have to play on a daily basis, and win 14 in a row is even more than we could have hoped for." Our whole team played together and in the end it certainly worked for us.

The team representing DFAS pulled off two upsets in the playoffs to get into the championship game. They first beat the second seeded Navy team 20-13, and then beat an upstart fire department team 12-8, on the last play of the game. That come from behind victory was one of the most exciting games to watch on Saturday. The Osborne, said "I feel like our team played well together and worked really hard in the playoffs. To go out and play like we did against a very good team was awesome. I know we came up short this year, but now we have tasted what it is like, and we look forward to the chance to get back there again and turn the outcome in our favor.

This years flag football season was full of surprises and upsets. Tech. Sgt. Ronald Stelly, fitness center noncommissioned officer in charge said, "This was one of the most fantastic seasons ever at Buckley AFB. The level of competition was outstanding and the camaraderie that developed between teams was more than I could have hoped for. I am sure that next season will be even more fantastic."
